SOLUTION BRIEF · DOLLAR UNIVERSE TO AUTOMIC CONVERSION

Keep what works. Move on schedule.

Most Dollar Universe teams aren't moving because the jobs stopped running. They're moving for AI, cloud, and SaaS, and because the know-how sits with one or two people.

RMT moves Dollar Universe workloads to Broadcom's Automic, self-hosted or SaaS, in planned waves, while Dollar Universe runs the rest.

Workload Automation conversions completed by RMT

90 days
typical path to your first jobs running on Automic

1-to-1
feature parity between Automic self-hosted and SaaS

Conversion count spans Workload Automation schedulers. Timelines depend on environment size and your team's availability. Environments with many thousands of jobs may take closer to 180 days.

WHAT'S PUSHING DOLLAR UNIVERSE TEAMS TO MOVE

- AI, cloud, and new ERP projects are on the roadmap.
- Only one or two people really know how the uprocs and sessions fit together.
- Upgrades and patches keep slipping while the team keeps the lights on.
- Automation is spread across Dollar Universe, scripts, and other schedulers.

BUILT FOR A LOW-RISK MOVE: RMT HELPS WITH

- Dollar Universe runs what hasn't moved yet
- A low-risk pilot group first, then waves
- Automated conversion with job-count checks
- Your programs and scripts stay as they are
- Unit and system testing before cutover
- Support for every wave through final cutover

HOW THE CONVERSION WORKS

Four stages, one conveyor belt

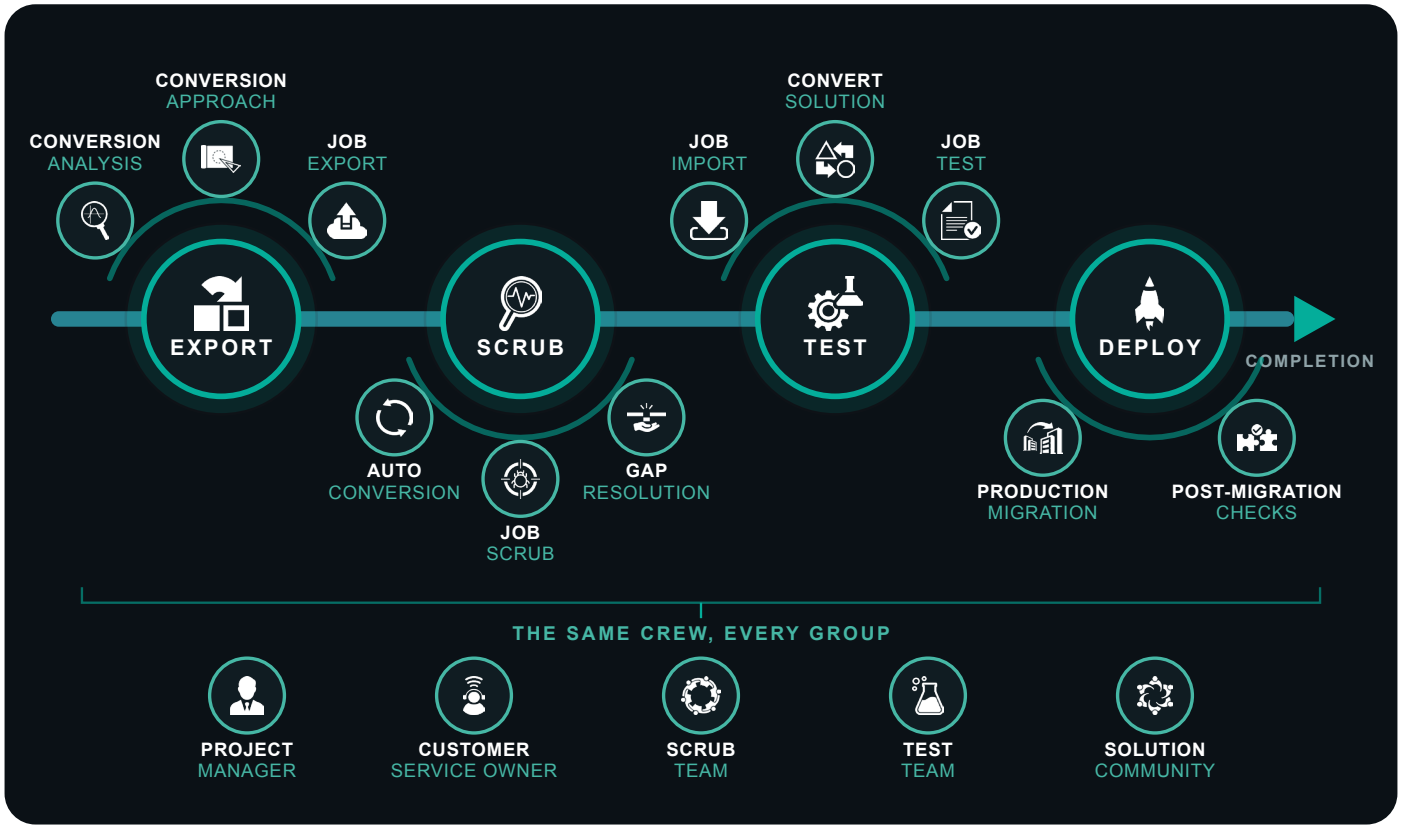
Every group of jobs rides the same belt: the same stations and the same crew, one group at a time.



The typical 90-day path

Weeks 1–2: assess and plan. Weeks 3–6: build and validate. Weeks 7–12: go live and optimize, with hypercare after cutover.

ASSESS · BUILD · GO LIVE

Known risks, planned for Management unit (MU) structures, uproc launch conditions, session chains, task launch windows, calendars, and app-team time and awareness, the most common reason conversions run long.
